SECTION II Reading

(50 minutes)

Part A

Directions:

Read the following two texts. Answer the questions on each text by choosing A, B, C or D. Mark your answers on your ANSWER SHEET.

Text 1

“Please don't call me a blogger!” Jack Monroe implores me halfway during the interview. Fair enough--she may be known by many for her blog, A Girl Called Jack, but since its launch in February 2012, she has gone on to be an author of two books, journalist, campaigner, chef and award-winner, as well as being a mother.

Monroe originally set up her blog in response to a local councilor who claimed that “drunks and single mums are ruining the high street.” She filled her blog with budget recipes and tips on living on a limited food budget, which aroused the interest of national media. Monroe is outspoken and no-nonsense, and her recipes reflect that. She has had no formal food training, but has collected enough skills along the way to fill two cookbooks.

“I occasionally work at Blackfoot restaurant at Exmouth Market,” says Monroe. “The staff there have been brilliant.They've showed me how to do simple things like cutting onions.Every time I learn a new skill I want to share it with my readers.”

Monroe has been engaged in charity work with Oxfam and many other organizations.She has most recently teamed up with Groupon to offer five exclusive recipes costing less than £5 to make,raising money for Oxfam.“It's a cause close to my heart—in my worst periods,I relied so much on charity,”says Monroe.“I think,if you can give something back,do.”

Monroe's lowest point saw her struggling to survive and feed her son on welfare.“Before I started my blog,I'd go to the supermarket,buy a 77p mac and cheese meal,give my son half for lunch and half for dinner,and often go without.”Monroe has certainly enjoyed tremendous success since her days of 77p ready meals.Her first cook book,A Girl Called Jack,topped the paperback charts last year,and her follow-up,A Year in 120 Recipes,was published last October.But she hasn't forgotten past hard times,and takes part in Oxfam's annual Live Below the Linechallenge, living on less than £1 a day.

26.The text shows that Jack Monroe is best known as _____ .

[A] a writer

[B] a blogger

[C] a journalist

[D] a campaigner

27.Monroe launched her blog in order to_____ .

[A] defend the councilor

[B] attract the attention of media

[C] speak for the single mums

[D] criticize the drunks in high street

28.The text indicates that Monroe learnt cooking mainly_____ .

[A] at home

[B] at a restaurant

[C] on the Internet

[D] from a cookbook

29. At present, Monroe is_____ .

[A] busy writing another book

[B] eager to get formal training

[C] proud of her restaurant

[D] active in charity work

30. The text is probably written by_____ .

[A] a restaurant critic

[B] a media reporter

[C] a book publisher

[D] a local councilor

Text 2

The combination of declining birthrate and longer life spans has led to a surprising demographic development.Whereas in the 1970s it was commonly said that the world would have too many people,by the 1990s it was fashionable to argue that,for some developed nations,the opposite would soon be true.Soon,the argument went,there would not be enough able-bodied,young workers to support a gray-haired population.

Well,maybe not.There's no question that taking care of the elderly and frail will add huge costs,stretching already overburdened pension and health-care systems.But with people living longer and continuing to contribute productively to society,we need to think again just what we mean by old.In Japan,for instance,more than a quarter of the population is currently at the age of 60 or older,a figure that's set to reach 42% by 2050.Many of these folks are hardly sitting idly at home.One in three Japanese aged 60 or over is still part of the labor force.

Keeping older folks employed is particularly important because by mid-century the world will have more elderly people than children.To compensate,several European nations have raised retirement ages by as much as five years,while expanding anti-age-discrimination laws.By 2050, nearly a third of the developed world's labor force will be aged 50 or older.

Many elderly are spending more,too.While a large amount of their savings will be needed to fund longer retirements and higher health payments,older people have considerable purchasing power.Britons over 50 years of age,for instance,control 75% of the country's wealth,according to Abbey National Bank.Businesses oriented to a so-called silver economy are booming,offering everything from elderly-friendly housing to trips for retiree globetrotters.

With the older generation controlling so much of the world's money,it's hardly fair to dismiss senior citizens as an inevitable burden on society.“Many Japanese are living so long,it's like they've been given second lives,”says Toshiko Katayose,the 58-year-old editor of a Tokyo magazine dedicated to older people .“They're doing everything with energy:working and even doing math drills to keep mentally fit.”

31.What worries people in developed countries now is that there will soon be_____ .

- [A] a decline of the world population
- [B] decline of the senior population
- [C] a shortage of younger workers
- [D] a shortage of skilled workers

32.With today's change in population structure,we should re-examine our previous view on_____ .

- [A] how to handle social burdens
- [B] how to control health care costs
- [C] the definition of the old age
- [D] the responsibilities of the society

33. According to the text, one solution to labor shortage is to _____ .

- [A] extend people's working careers
- [B] allow the retired to work at home
- [C] make laws on compulsory retirement
- [D] encourage people to have more babies

34. According to the text, the elderly contribute to _____ .

- [A] the rise of living standards
- [B] the saving of health payments
- [C] the emergence of a new economy
- [D] the increase of retirement pension

35. From the text we learn that the elderly in Japan _____ .

- [A] take up nearly half of the country's whole population
- [B] are still actively engaged in their work and lives
- [C] possess a greater part of the country's wealth
- [D] live longer than the elderly in other countries

Part B

Directions:

Read the texts from a magazine in which five people talked about whether or not to have an MBA degree. For questions 36~40, match the name of each person to one of the statements (A~G) given below. Mark your answers on your ANSWER SHEET.

Peter:

Personally, I don't think the MBA pays off. I received my MBA from a "well-recognized" program last year, and of the companies I worked for, most small to midsize, none paid above market price for extra training. All they cared about was your past work experience. Also, if 80% of all businesses consist of small companies, and small companies don't really care about the MBA, why get one?

Blake:

I have 20 years of work experience, and I just received my MBA this year. I can say that a few years of working will provide most people with a similar amount of knowledge. The MBA hype is more of an "I did it, so you need to do it" situation. I work for a company that does business overseas, and I will receive no additional compensation for my efforts.

Helen:

People used to say the same thing about not needing a bachelor's degree that they now say about MBAs. Bill Gates couldn't get a job today without a degree. Times have changed again. More and more jobs posted say MBA required. I've been turned down for jobs that require an MBA, even though I have over 15 years of professional experience. Don't be fooled; get all the education you can.

Lucy:

If I had to judge the MBA program I am attending solely on classroom learning, I would say that it is overpriced. But the contacts I have made are invaluable. I have a great set of classmates, many of whom are looking to get their startups off the ground. The contacts I am making now will go a long way toward helping me land that first job after the program.

Mike:

If you are completely lost in the wild and you'd like to survive, what is going to help you more, a dagger or a Swiss Army knife? Most of us would pick a Swiss Army knife since it gives us a much greater variety of tools to work with and can be adapted to fit most situations. That is what the MBA provides in the business world. Plain and simple!

Now match the name of each person (36-40) to the appropriate statement.

Note: there are two extra statements.

Statements

- | | |
|-----------|---|
| 36. Peter | [A] You can acquire in your work what you learn in an MBA program. |
| 37. Blake | [B] Though not financially helpful, my MBA helps raise my confidence. |
| 38. Helen | [C] Though unfairly costly, my MBA connects me with useful people. |
| 39. Lucy | [D] The MBA can raise your chance of survival in the business world. |
| 40. Mike | [E] You'll be left out if you lag behind others in education. |
| | [F] My MBA has really benefited me in a variety of ways. |
| | [G] My MBA means nothing to me but an empty check. |

Part C

Directions:

Read the following text from which five sentences have been removed. Choose from the sentences A ~ G the most suitable one to fill each numbered gap in the text (41~45). There are TWO extra sentences that you do not need to use. Mark your answers on your ANSWER SHEET.

Stuck in traffic. Constant interruptions. Held up at slow supermarket checkouts. Our days can be full of minor frustrations. 41

Frustration occurs at that point where we don't get what we want, or where we are denied the possibility of doing something we want to do. 42 This is all too evident when we see an overtired toddler show his frustration by losing the plot. The feelings are the same, the only difference is that we have learnt to recognize and regulate them better. Memorable frustrations for me as an adult include a first iPhone, when my fingers skittered over the screen misspelling every word and I felt as frustrated as a young child trying to do a jigsaw puzzle for the first time.

43 It can even be a spur to motivation, pushing us to take a closer look at what, exactly, is making us feel this way and to make changes. If we can just press pause at this point, engaging with the feeling of frustration, it might reveal its root cause and provide helpful answers. For example, if you feel frustrated that you're not making progress at work, maybe the answer is to gain more experience or it's time to change your job. 44

Frustration can also be increased by other feelings, say, resentment, annoyance or disappointment, which makes it a whole lot worse, particularly when we feel physically tired, hungry or generally stressed. 45

It's always useful then to try and take a step back when we feel frustrated, to assess what exactly it is that's frustrating us, and to distinguish between what we want and what we need so as to make necessary but acceptable changes.

[A] Here, frustration can stimulate us to take the steps that might result in a positive change.

[B] Understanding why frustration occurs can be useful in helping us to move through it.

[C] Learning to manage frustration is important so that it doesn't become overwhelming.

[D] Then we hit that point of frustration much sooner than if we are in a calm state of mind.

[E] Then, obviously, how we feel is caused by other people or something else.

[F] The good news is that frustration is not always a bad thing.

[G] Dealing with frustration doesn't have to be a difficult task.

Part D

Directions:

Read the following text from which 10 words have been removed. Choose from the words A~O the most suitable one to fill each numbered gap in the text (46~55). There are FIVE extra words that you do not need to use. Mark your answers on your ANSWER SHEET.

For many people, golf is the sport of choice. While watching any number of sports may be fun, golfing often is a way that many people 46 to spend much of their free time.

Playing golf is an excellent way to 47 light exercise. Eighteen holes of golf mean at least a couple of hours spent outdoors, with plenty of 48 air and sunshine. Being able to play a game while doing something that is good for the body can be very appealing.

People like playing golf partly because the sport is a way to remove the mind 49 day to day cares. While playing, they don't have much time to worry about their jobs, or some minor ongoing situation 50 the family.

Of all sports, golfing can be a great way to build social and business 51. People have found better jobs and gained customers while spending time on the golf course. The fact that two people both like playing golf can be a 52 for better things to come.

Time spent playing on their 53 golf courses is a wonderful way to spend time with loved ones. Family may find that golfing is a way to keep in 54 with one another, in spite of busy 55. Friends may find that a weekly round of golf helps keep everyone informed of what is happening in each other's lives.

SECTION III Writing

(45 minutes)

Directions:

You should write your responses to both Part A and Part B of this section on your ANSWER SHEET.

Part A

56.

The fridge in your apartment is not working properly. Write a note to Paul, your landlord, tell him about:

- 1) the problem you have;
- 2) the inconveniences it has caused;
- 3) your request of asking him to come and have a check.

You should write about 100 words. Do not sign your own name at the end of your email. Use “Wang Lin” instead.

Part B

57.

Directions:

Read the text below. Write an essay in about 120 words, in which you should summarize the key points of the text and make comments on them. Try to use your own words.

When Charlotte Tidwell was in first grade, the teachers at her school made a bargain: If she helped her mother to clean the building after class, she could attend for free. The teachers' kindness would accompany Tidwell through her life—from being accepted as one of three African Americans in her nursing program and becoming Sparks Hospital's director of medical nursing to founding a charity with which she feeds more than 7,000 people a month in her hometown, Fort Smith.

Fort Smith was once a thriving manufacturing town, but it never recovered after its factories started to close in 2000. When Tidwell heard some elderly people were eating cat food out of desperation, she started handing out groceries from a truck. A former boss connected Tidwell with an investor, who gave her the building where her group, the Antioch Consolidated Association for Youth and Family, is based.

Tidwell, 69, and her volunteers work ten-to-12-hour shifts at the warehouse Monday to Friday. On Saturdays, they bring food and other sustenance to senior housing complexes. Once, while escorting kids to sing at a home, she saw a man crying. He was reminded that his radio was broken, so Tidwell returned later with a new radio. “The greatest satisfaction is to watch others grow with compassion,” she says.

“I see volunteers transformed, and it makes me know we can get back to a community of caring I grew up with.”

Decades ago, some teachers changed a little girl's life—now it's payback time.
